

Liesel's Story, Chapter 7

I made enquiries because it's one thing that I've got on my to do list before I finally leave this mortal coil is to go and visit my father's grave. I have been informed that because of the, quote unquote, "political situation" in 1937 my mother wasn't allowed to bury him. He was cremated which of course is against the Jewish religion but my mother did put a stone, a memorial stone in the Jewish cemetery in Hildesheim so some time, maybe in the next 2 or 3 years I may make a pilgrimage but I'm really not happy about going to Germany on my own. I, I was there in 1978 with my older daughter, she was training to be a ballet dancer and we actually went to Hildesheim but I felt really threatened all the time, I kept ringing my husband up and saying "they're coming for me" so obviously something happened when I was very young that has imprinted on my brain. Yes.